Miss MacGregor Says Trip of
3,000 Miles Was Series of Marriage Offers.

Ex-Columbia Student Is First
White Woman to Cross From Lima to Para.

Miss Katherine MacGregor, who is a mixture of Scotch and Quaker ancestry, with a good deal of Yankee daring, has just returned from a trip across the widest part of South America, including the Andes Mountains, which she made by muleback, dugout canoe and steam launch. The fearless young woman, who is slender, blue eyed, had black hair and has dimples, arrived during her triumphant tour more proposals of marriage than any other girl in the same length of time, probably. Spanish gentlemen have a way of offering their hands in marriage to American girls. Among the most cherished souvenirs of the intrepid traveler's remarkable trip are the skin of a tigress which she herself shot right through the head; a shell hairpin, which lost all its mates joggling up and down mountain trails and the only one to cross the Andes, and a bracelet filled with notes.

She is the first white woman to cross the Andes over the trail from Lima, Peru, to Para, at the mouth of the Amazon River. As the crowd files it is nearly 3,000 miles, and it took from July 20 to August 1. Only by being ahead of schedule did she escape being kidnapped by a Campas Indian chief, and once her mule was pushed off the trail where a landslide covered it and both the animal and rider barely missed falling over a precipice. As it was, they rolled down thirty feet, where they were caught in a tangle of brush.

Miss MacGregor is from Waipaco, Wis., where she held the position of assistant manager of a public utility organization. During the war she studied at the Columbia School of Journalism, and it was for copy that she determined to set out and get a larger slice of life than the town of her father, Malcolm MacGregor, her only living parent, offers.

"I'm through staying out," declared the young mountain climber, when seen yesterday at 226 Fifth Avenue. "And I've given up forever the notion that women should sit on a sofa and sew a fine seam. I'm for exploring and I intend to go back and cover more trails in about a month. That's how much I liked it!"

Her party, which left Lima under a storm of advice and remonstrance from friends and strangers alike, included an Englishman as guide, two muleteers and herself. Each rode a mule and there were seven pack mules. "So far as is known no white woman ever crossed this trail," said Miss MacGregor. "We were seven days going over the Andes, two days on the Pichis River in a dugout canoe and the rest of the time in a steam launch."

"The entire trip was an ovation. Natives turned out all along the way to welcome me. I carried a letter of introduction from Mr. Legula, President of the Republic of Peru. Also I was fortified with a police whistle, which helped me in emergency, though there was one occasion when it failed. This was while we were on one of the rivers. We had gone ashore to explore, I taking a machete to cut a trail. Suddenly I came upon an Indian who had just killed a tiger. When the Indian saw me he disappeared. I blew my whistle, but my guide didn't hear it. Then I saw two tiger cubs playing near the dead animal and thinking it was their mother I picked them up and began petting them. Training had taught me to keep my gun always by my side. While fondling the tiny creatures I heard a rustle in the grass and looked into the eyes of the mother of the cubs. She was standing about fifteen feet away. During the instant that she hesitated after discovering me I resumed my presence of mind and took aim. She dropped right there and I had her skin tanned and brought it home with me. The guide says this hole in the head is where one of my bullets struck her."

FIGHT BREWING FOR NORTHCLEFF PRESS

and other important magazine and newspaper interests in both London and the provinces.

Lord Northcliffe once described "the Berrys" as the coming power in Fleet Street. It is also supposed generally that Lord Beaverbrook would like the Times. He is nearest like Lord Northcliffe and with his close cooperation made Mr. Lloyd George Prime Minister, and he is no younger man than Lord Northcliffe when he bought the Times. Lord Beaverbrook also is accustomed to large financial deals and is intimate with Lord Rothermere to whom it was first generally supposed his brother, Lord Northcliffe, would leave the Times shares.

Sir John Ellerman also is reported to be interested in erecting a control of the Times and another who is mentioned is Sir Mackay Edgar, a Canadian millionaire who recently bought the Saturday Review and who is reported to be interested together with important financial groups in preserving the Times's imperial character.

Sir Mackay Edgar is likely to be anti-administration. Lord Derby and Lord Astor also are mentioned as possible contenders, though Garvin does not use their names, and it is also recalled that when the Times previously was on the market important foreign interests sought to obtain control. There is just as little possibility of the control of the Times going abroad now, however, as there was before.

Meanwhile everything is likely to be tied up by the appointment of an administrator pendent lite. If the litigation is not settled it is likely to be long drawn out and perhaps bitter. Lord Northcliffe's first will is dated March 22, 1915, with codicils dated June 12, 1915; June 22, 1920; October 8, 1921, and April 27, 1922. Caveats have been entered under the names of Russell & Arnholz, solicitors, on August 16, two days after Lord Northcliffe's death; by Ellis Piers on August 18, and by Nicholas, Grahame & Co. on August 22. The solicitors refuse to disclose the names of their clients, but all the firms are known to have been connected at various times with Lord Northcliffe's business and family interests, so it is impossible to trace the significance.

He was released on a $2,000 bond and hearing was set for next Saturday.

It is also charged he tried to "shake down" Alexander Haggis, head waiter at the Hotel Walton, for $500 by a threat of exposure and in about twenty cases got money from waiters by similar threats.

ATLANTIC CITY TRIO SAVED IN PLANE CRASH

Three Thrown in Water When Aircraft Hits Wires.

Special Dispatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD. ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 26.—Capt. Jack Fitzsimons, aviator, 24; William Thompson, his manager, and Albert Clark, mechanic, had a narrow escape from death at noon today when a seaplane piloted by Fitzsimons plunged into the water east of the Florida Avenue drawbridge after becoming entangled in the overhead wires of the Atlantic and Suburban Railway Company. The plane was wrecked. The occupants escaped with a few bruises.

Fitzsimons said he was getting ready to descend on the east side of the bridge when his engine stalled. The plane struck the high tension wires, dragging them down. The seaplane missed the railing of the bridge by a few inches and fell to the water. They were rescued by fishermen.

POLICE DOG CAPTURES BORDER RUM RUNNER

'Will-o'-Wisp' Bootlegger' Is Arrested Also.

SARANAC LAKE, Aug. 26.—Peter Tanzini of this village, known to Federal and State authorities as the "bootlegging will-o'-the-wisp," was captured at Tehoville on the Canadian border last night by Capt. J. H. Broadfield of the State troopers and Sheriff P. S. Steenberg of Franklin county after a chase that had many of the ingredients of a movie thriller.

For the first time in the annals of rum running in northern New York a police dog made an arrest, the object of the animal's attention being Tony Salretti, a son-in-law of Tanzini. The capture was accidental. Capt. Broadfield and Sheriff Steenberg were searching for Paul Roseman, who had escaped from the Franklin county jail at Malone, when they sighted Tanzini and Salretti coming across the line from Canada with a liquor laden automobile. When he saw the officers Tanzini "stepped on the gas," but his car had not enough power to run away from the pursuing sleuths. Tanzini then resorted to strategy of breaking bottles of beer in the road in the hope that the officers' car would have its tires blown out.

The officers piloted their machine through the broken glass and finally overtook Tanzini's car in the village of Tehoville. Tanzini was seized, but his son-in-law jumped from the car and ran across the fields. The police dog was then released by Capt. Broadfield and it caught Salretti after a short flight. Tanzini and Salretti are now in the Franklin county jail.
